INDIGENOUS LAWS

in response to the COVID-19 pandemic

ABOUT THE WEBINAR

The First Nations Land Management Resource Centre is working with the Government of Canada to offer a series of National Online Conversations on Indigenous Law Enforcement. The first conversation in this webinar line-up will focus on Indigenous government responses to the COVID-19 pandemic, including laws enacted by Indigenous governments and the enforcement considerations they face.

Given the current state of the COVID-19 pandemic, plans to host a second National Indigenous Law Enforcement Conference have been delayed until 2021, as it is not possible to hold a large in-person conference at this time. In response, we have adapted the 2020 planned session to that of a series of national online conversations.

The Indigenous Laws in response to the COVID-19 Pandemic webinar will take place on May 29, 2020, at 12:00 pm EST/9:00 am PST.

The webinar will draw together experts in the field of Indigenous governance to provide further understanding and support on issues surrounding the enforcement of Indigenous laws.

Across Canada, many First Nation, Inuit and Métis governments are operating under expanded recognition of self-government authority, enacting increasingly sophisticated laws, and establishing their own enforcement capacity and systems. At the same time, many leaders have reached out to federal and provincial governments to explore how Indigenous lawmaking can or should interact with federal and provincial enforcement systems and courts.

We invite you to join this national online conversation as a first in a series of enforcement webinars over the coming months. Your participation will assist in promoting dialogue between Indigenous governments and the Government of Canada on how to address the challenges of creating effective and affordable enforcement systems for Indigenous laws.
